

KATRINA'S Reach Our Vulnerable Residents NOW LESSON

One size does not fit all in a disaster. If we're going to reach our vulnerable residents, we need to change the way we prepare, respond and recover. Here's an opportunity to start now.

S A V E T H E D A T E

Tuesday, October 24, 2006

8:00 am – 5:00 pm

www.dumasbaycentre.com

Join other public and private agencies as internationally recognized emergency trainer Âna-Marie Jones presents a vision for community-based response—a proven approach for reaching our highest-risk populations.

Plus, use the summit portion of the event to discuss preparedness issues foremost on your mind. Ms. Jones will facilitate an informal exchange of ideas and next steps as agencies (yours included) share their progress and plans.

The afternoon training offers you an opportunity to connect with community health and human services providers who serve our most vulnerable residents. Emergency managers and human services planners from every city in King County are invited.

Space is limited, so watch for your invitation and registration instructions coming soon by email. The cost of training, materials and lunch is covered for you.

D I D Y O U K N O W ?

Almost 86% of New Orleans-area agencies surveyed in the aftermath of Katrina did not know how to link to the emergency management community.* As partners, we can do better – lives depend on it.

Organized and Sponsored by Public Health – Seattle & King County

United Way of King County

Additional support for this event is provided by the Nonprofit Assistance Center.

source: SNAKE project, National Organization on Disabilities*